The screenshot shows the Google Maps website interface. At the top, there is a browser header with back, forward, and search buttons, and the URL http://maps.google.com. Below this is the Google Maps logo and a search bar with a magnifying glass icon. The search bar contains the placeholder text "Find businesses, addresses and places of interest." and includes a "Search" button and a "Show search options" link. A navigation bar below the search bar has "Get Directions" and "My Maps" buttons. The main content area on the left contains a sidebar with a lightbulb icon and a "Place name" input field, a "Country" dropdown, and links for "Directions", "Search nearby", "Save to...", and "more". Below this is a "Photo" section with four placeholder icons. Further down are sections for "Places" (with links to "Place one", "Place two", and "Place three") and "User-Created Maps" (with links to "User created map #1" and "User created map #2"). On the right side of the screen is a map with a zoom control (up, down, left, right arrows) and a scale bar. The bottom right corner of the map area shows the page number "10/27".

Leap Motion

Leap Motion provides the world's most powerful and sensitive touch-free 3-D motion-control and motion-sensing technology. Leap Motion's proprietary technology, invented by co-founder David Holz, can track the movement of both hands and all 10 fingers with up to 1/100th millimeter accuracy and no visible latency. The Leap Motion Controller is a small USB device available for pre-order at $79.99. The Leap Motion technology can easily embed into other consumer and enterprise hardware. Leap Motion allows anyone to use natural movements to interact with their computer, browse the web or use motion-control applications found in Airspace. For more information, visit www.leapmotion.com.
